And now, for the first time in nearly two millennia, there is a new translation of the Christian scriptures into Persian. In March, the New Testament in the Persian language and script (NTPS) was launched by the “Institute for Evangelical Studies and Ecumenism” (Intesis, a fellowship of English speaking Christians in Iran). The new translation is built on a cooperation between Intesis, several Iranian churches, and the “College of the Bible” in Paris. The translation will be published by Intesis and the Evangelical Book Centre. It is expected to be published in about 30,000 copies by the end of this year. NTPS is mainly an ecumenical project. The Intesis project leaders interviewed Christians and Muslims in Iran and India to find out what others wanted from a Persian New Testament. Iranian Christians who did not want to use any Arabic words in the translation and expected people to be able to read the Bible in Persian, wrote what they wanted. One of the point of NTPS is to make the Bible of use in the country. “We were surprised that many people want a translation in their own language and script,” said Christian evangelist Edy thei, who helped with the translations. The translations are a faithful continuation of the previous versions, mostly the original Vulgate, but some words were replaced with Persian terms for the same meaning. For example, the word “baptism” was changed to “bathing,” which is
