I want to hide the remaining content if the id of my string is "page-section-2" - how would I go about doing that? TKS. A: If you know the id of your second container, then you can do something like: $('twocontainer').hide(); If you don't know the actual id, then you can search by using: $('div[id~=page-section-2]') If you want more generic matches, this answer to another question has a full list of attribute selectors: css attribute selector A: You could give all divs with a certain parent div a class, like page-section-2. Then simply do: $('page-section-2').hide(); If you use ID's you don't want to apply this to multiple ID's. If you want to use classes as you do already, the above snippet will not work. You have to give a class to those element as well. At least for me, there are no classes named.twocontainer. But if you do this:

I guess some CSS styling (not sure how exactly since I'm not a CSS guy) would select elements with a class of.twocontainer. I see crazy sums coming out during the Final Four and so far it's been the same upsets we've seen. The Cardinals knocked off Texas A&M to send Arizona to the Final Four and the mere possibility

More particularly, the present invention is directed to relief valves used to prevent catastrophic failure of an apparatus such as, for example, a hydraulic cylinder assembly, associated with a machine which automatically changes the position of a pressurized fluid or a hydraulic cylinder assembly, which may be either air or hydraulic type. In either case, it is necessary that a relief valve be provided in such a manner that it will remain operable under a variety of circumstances so that the working pressure of the fluid is not suddenly released. Conventionally, relief valves for a system which includes a power source and a plurality of hydraulic cylinder assemblies are designed for the normally anticipated point of failure and will remain operable in such failure. However, because of the costs involved in maintaining such systems, it is a goal in the industry to minimize the probability of failure so that unnecessary maintenance expenses are reduced. Moreover, because of the improved low cost of hydraulic cylinder assemblies, it is a further goal to prevent the catastrophic failure of those hydraulic cylinder assemblies which are relatively inexpensive to manufacture and maintain. for the History Channel: 2012 in HISTORY Published: February 26, 2012 Updated: February 27, 2012 History Channel will devote the 2012 version of "Space Balls" to the remarkable United States space program since the end of World War II. The 2012 Space Balls will be divided into two segments, each of which is devoted to an important segment of the program: early space tourism and exploration and life in the space station. The program will begin on Saturday, April 1, at 10:00 pm ET. The second segment and a series of five "museum-style" Christmas specials beginning on December 11, will then be aired through Christmas. (No specific times for the Christmas series have been announced yet.) "Space Balls: The History Channel Edition," which will be produced by the History Channel in cooperation with the cast, will have "the world-class A-list celebrity interview stars of" "The History Channel's top programs," said HISTORY's President of Programming, Brian Idolski. The interview stars will include such programs as "Ancient Aliens," "Vikings," "Strange Days with Scott & Steve" and "Dorkenstein." Also contributing to the interview series will be a new sidekick, introducing himself as "Geoff J. Guessman, Manager, Tailor Made Space Pants," (though he only appears at the beginning of each segment and his contribution is fairly minimal). Mr. Audience The first segment will examine the emergence of the American space program and the first weeks and months that followed the climax of the first successful launch in the United States in 1959. Included with this period will be a review of the first American spaceports, especially that of the northwestern desert landscape of the Mojave. Bookending the series will be interviews with the founders of the human spaceflight programs of the development of the "Athena" and "Vanguard" programs; by then, it was Lyndon Johnson who was the U.S. president. The second segment will ask the question of whether humans can sustainably live on other worlds, and will examine the third and fourth human spaceflights of the Mercury and Gemini programs. Considering the two Soviet "Sputniks" landed in the 1960s, it did not go unnoticed that the first one was not unmanned, but had a second occupant aboard in an official adoption of spaceflight. (If you look closely, the second "Sputnik" will not literally

Dolphins-cyborgs and open space - this is an exciting puzzle. Yes, the dolphins-cyborgs did an unexpected thing - they sent a spacecraft into space! In the game you will find many interesting levels of varying complexity. You have to untangle a clever tangle of rubber threads, as required by the upper screen. You are waiting for 90 wonderful levels. Before you will be a screen where the figure consists of blue lines. In the workspace, you need to repeat this figure. To do this, you need to control the position of the cubes with the mouse. Cube's threads stretch like rubber. ATTENTION, for passing the level of the thread must not intersect anywhere, in particular, shouldn't be on top of each other. { -# LANGUAGE LambdaCase #- } ukulele players because I actually like playing the ukulele and it seems to work with children nicely. I like "the sound" of it as well. My work colleague said to me as we were having a drink one time: "You like playing the uke surely? At least that's what you are picking it up and putting down". I sort of went red then and there. There are some great ukulele songs out there. I also like learning songs by other musicians as that is always a bit of an inspiration. For my background: I am 38, married with 3 kids. I had nieces that were young enough that they tried to teach me when I was younger; I have also found that with my own children, if you teach them anything you will never forget it and I would hope to learn new things myself. My children are now 11, 9 and 5. My "learning to play"
