More particularly, the present invention relates to a centrifugal fan having noise reduction and foreign matter removal capabilities as well as a support means for accommodating downwardly directed airflow. Centrifugal fans are generally well known in the art. Typically, a centrifugal fan includes a base with a motor positioned in a lower portion of the base and a fan hub positioned in an upper portion of the base. The motor typically includes three phases (a.k.a. stator) or a two-pole (a.k.a. rotor) motor. The motor and/or fan hub includes a plurality of blades that extend radially outwardly from the base in a centrifugal motion to draw air into the fan and into the motor. In operation, a squirrel cage or other type of stator motor is rotated by an exterior drive shaft, resulting in a rotating motion of the blades. This rotating motion causes the air drawn into the fan to be accelerated radially outwardly by the rotating motion of the blades. The fan is provided with a housing or shroud that is positioned in surrounding relation to the outer periphery of the fan hub. The housing or shroud has an inlet opening in fluid communication with an interior of the housing and an outlet opening in fluid communication 0cc13bf012
