Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a measuring apparatus having a reference object which includes a measuring object to be measured, which object is supported by a base, and which measurement object, in a measuring state, is connected to a measuring device which generates measuring signals for the measurement object, the measuring device consisting of a device carrier and a measurement arrangement. The invention also relates to a method of measuring the position of the base with respect to the device carrier. 2. Related Background Art From the published, non-prosecuted patent applications EP-A1 0 455 327 and WO 93/22 577 a method of manufacturing a measuring apparatus of the type referred to above is known in which a base is adjusted by reference to the position of reference objects, which are designed as measuring objects to be measured, with respect to a base. However, the measuring apparatus according to the reference objects then known in the technical field of the invention has a disadvantage which is caused by the mechanical mounting of the base with respect to the reference objects, in particular if the base is not already accurately positioned with respect to the reference objects, as a result of which the base, in turn, has to be adjusted again by reference to the position of the reference objects. In addition, the measuring apparatus has a disadvantage that the measuring apparatus does not always measure with high accuracy, in particular if one of the reference objects is not completely or equally with respect to the reference object to be measured, as

I'm serious. Although I love the occasional meander through the surface of things (which is the perfect timing, as I was looking at some sth that popped up the other day), I need to go deep into things and explore all those hidden places that lie underneath the face of reality. So I'm taking a bit of a break from the normal here. I've been feeling a bit down lately. Today may be a bit of a reminder that the world, like our life, is a very big place full of wonder and beauty. It is also, sadly, a place with so many stories. Unfortunately, when you get to live in a world so large, so full of stories, you end up hearing just a few of them - at best. That's because the largest of all stories (big enough to be almost frightening) is being told over there. When I was a child, this story was told over there, as far as I remember: I grew up hearing that China had land all the way to the North Pole. This was a world-shattering bit of news for a child of the 1980s. How could that be? This was a place where many people stood on their roofs with crystal-clear eyes and looked up to the heavens with a "how-dare-it-happen" expression on their faces? Yet here I was, a kid in Iowa, walking past fields and highways in the Springtime and saying to myself, "Yup. The whole landmass of China used to be attached to North America." Yet I'm not complaining. The years have brought me a lot of things. As far as the things in life that can be called "years," they've brought me a lot of things, but they haven't brought me as much positive contentment as this one does: a wonderful sense of awe that I get whenever I pass by a certain reservoir near my house. This thing was a curiosity for a while - I didn't know much about them (but then, that's not uncommon), but I knew they were there and that it was something to do with

We are still in the middle of a perfect storm of technology. Unprecedented changes in the world economy, consumer preferences, and the evolution of consumers' lifestyles are changing the way businesses and services are being provided. The traditional financial marketplace is being shaken up and financial services are migrating towards the Internet. Such drastic changes have changed the traditional financing landscape for many businesses, even those who already have a strong traditional banking system. The trend is inevitable, and it will have a significant impact on the entire economy. The future of finance is still an open question. One thing is for sure, though: the unpredictable and uncontrollable landscape, coupled with unprecedented level of interest on Internet technology, will not slow down the process of transformation in the financial services industry. Instead, it will accelerate the move towards new online services, creating new models, and reshaping customers' expectations and habits. How can businesses stay ahead of this change and remain relevant? They have to adapt and adopt. To be relevant in this new industry, businesses need to take a radical change: by providing customers with services that make more sense and are adapted to their needs. What's more, they also need to rethink their customer experience, and this is no mean feat when it comes to traditional banking. FinTech is here to stay, and it's only a matter of time before it becomes the new norm. However, those who don't move with the times will risk falling behind. In the end, it's not about 'if' FinTech will come, but 'when' it will make its mark in financial services. The ball has long been in your court, and now is the time to join the revolution. Change

A rapid PCR protocol for the typing of Leishmania major and Leishmania infantum by single-strand conformation polymorphism. We have developed a single-strand conformation polymorphism (SSCP)-based PCR method to type Leishmania major and Leishmania infantum. Discrete M- and S-mutant forms of the kinetoplast DNA minicircle are amplified by degenerate oligonucleotide-based PCR. SSCP analysis of the amplification products results in their distinct electrophoretic mobilities under non-denaturing conditions. Analysis of hybridization profiles can be achieved by capillary gel electrophoresis. A single panel of 3 primers was identified which generates specific melt peaks and resolves the hybridization patterns of major and S-mutant mutant genotypes with high discriminatory power. Test with DNA from geographically separated and clinically active human leishmaniasis cases in Iran confirms the specificity of this primer panel. This assay was applied to high-throughput DNA typing of rapidly growing parasites. Little variation was observed in the electrophoretic profiles of the test DNA, with the exception of Zervax DNA samples that served as controls.
