Field of the Invention This invention is related to a liquid pump assembly and more particularly to a scroll-type pump assembly which is particularly well suited for pumping a relatively light viscous liquid from a reservoir without producing any appreciable pressure or flow of the liquid. 2. History of the Prior Art It is known in the prior art to use a liquid pump in which two or more scroll members rotate relatively to each other to move a piston in the pump housing to force liquid into a discharge chamber. While such pumps may be effective, many of the pumps of the prior art have several disadvantages such as using complicated and unreliable sealing arrangements, using mechanical elements which can be subject to wear and which may require maintenance. Pumps in accordance with the present invention are of the scroll type, but the scroll members are sealed relative to the housing and no liquid is displaced as a result of the relative rotation of the scroll members. Moreover, the scroll members do not wear and are not subject to maintenance. It is an object of the present invention to provide a scroll-type pump which is particularly well suited for pumping a relatively light viscous liquid without producing any appreciable pressure or flow of the liquid. It is another object of the present invention to provide a scroll-type liquid pump which uses no moving parts and no mechanical sealing elements. It is still another object of the present invention to provide a scroll-type liquid pump which is relatively simple and inexpensive to produce.

Q: Synchronize the styling and text of a text field in a UITableViewCell I have a UITableView which has three different kinds of text fields in a single cell. The top text field is a dynamic text field where the number of characters is not fixed. The middle text field is a normal text field which has a fixed number of characters. The bottom text field is a static text field which also has a fixed number of characters. When the user enters text in the dynamic text field, I want to synchronize the styling and text of all the other text fields to
